Like Williams' masterpiece Refuge, An Unspoken Hunger is centered in the landscape of the American west and in Williams' fierce feminist environmentalism, which she sees as continuous with her heritage as a Mormon woman. These essays range more widely, however, from the Serengeti to the marshlands of the Bronx and.

A manifesto both fierce and compassionate from one of our most eloquent and elegant voices of the American West. Terry Tempest Williams weaves together the passion of personal experience with the presence of political commitment. In this gathering of work, Williams explores our unspoken hunger, our desire for a life of greater intention. In a series of detailed and beautifully rendered portraits, she illuminates the strength and inspiration that helped to form Georgia O'Keeffe, Rachel Carson ...
