I was looking to relearn my lost technique, in both classical and jazz / blues. I bought the original Hanon exercises (a must-buy) and spotted this series for blues and jazz by Peter Deneff whilst searching 'Hanon'. I had high hopes, but I am extremely disappointed, particularly with this blues edition.

The blues and the boogie-woogie have much in common: the formal structure, the chordal sequence, and some bass figures. But there are certain differences, two of them being the tempo and the dynamics. Since the blues is originally a song of lamentation describing a life close to the bone, it is usually in a slow tempo and on a medium dynamic level.
